Who Was Otis Redding?

Born on September 9, 1941, in Dawson, Georgia, Otis Redding grew up in a family where music was a daily affair. The youngest of six children, he was introduced to gospel at church and later found his footing in the blues and rhythm and blues scenes of the South. By the early 1960s, Redding was performing in clubs across the southeastern United States, quickly gaining recognition for his powerful vocal delivery and charismatic stage presence.

In 1964, he signed with Stax Records in Memphis, a label that would become synonymous with soul music. Redding's partnership with producer and guitarist Steve Cropper produced some of the most iconic tracks of the era, cementing his status as a rising star. Tragically, his career was cut short when he died in a plane crash on December 10, 1967, at the age of 26.
